

Introduction: John Larroquette

John Larroquette may be best known for his multiple Emmy Award-winning role as the libidinous prosecutor Dan Fielding on the hit NBC sitcom, "Night Court". He was awarded four consecutive Emmys for his work. Then he starred in the eponymous "The John Larroquette Show". A critically acclaimed comedy also on NBC. It allowed Larroquette to play a recovering alcoholic, a role that wasn't much of a stretch. A prolific drinker during the '70s, the actor got sober in 1982 and has spent much of his time since sharing his story so that others suffering from the same disease might realize there is a way out of the bottle and into life.